VIRGINIA LOSES IN THE ELEVENTH

By far the best game played at Broad Street Park this season was witnessed yesterday when the University of Virginia lost an eleven-inning game by the score of 1 to 6. The contest was marked by spectacular plays, and the way the Virginians fielded the ball was good to see.

It was a pitcher's battle royal between Sussong and Heyneger, and the former lost out not because of inferior work, but because the Tigers had a heavier hitting team. At bat Virginia was weak, but their fielding and baserunning was superior to the Tigers. Six times the State university had a man on third, but the batters always failed to score. Only once did the Northern ers get a man on third, and that was when he was brought home from second by the only two-base hit in the game.

Heyneger pitched a superb game, striking out thirteen men and time after time working out of difficult holes. Honaker was the only man that could find him, and was responsible for the only two hits scored by his team. Honaker and Maddux put up a fine game, first and second, and Walker put up a star performance at first, at one time picking a wild ball out of the sky with his mitt and putting out the runner.

Nearly 2,000 spectators sat in the grandstand and bleachers. The day was raw and cold, and turned-up overcoats were in order. The temperature was so low that at no time did it allow the roots to thaw out sufficiently to make much noise.

In the first inning, Fish, for Princeton, after walking, was sacrificed to second by Warwick, but Vaughn flew out to Pieford and Sides grounded to Sussong. Honaker, the first man up for Virginia, also walked, and went to second on an error of first. Walker and Hoff fanned, and after Honaker went to third on a wild pitch, Hume fanned.

In the third Sussong made a nice stop of Dawson's bounding grounder. Fish walked and stole second, but was left on base. In the fifth, after Heyneger had singled to second, Battin struck out. Dawson went to first on balls, but both Fish and Warwick fanned. Vaughn flew out to Hoff in the sixth and Honaker made a spectacular catch of Sides' fly. Following this Maddux robbed Harlan of a hit over second.

Virginia had all kinds of chances to score in the eighth, but failed with the stick. Pieford walked and Sussong reached first on Pieford's error, while Pieford went to second. Honaker then made a bunt, which was good for a single, filling all the bags with no outs. Then Walker poked first on a fielder's choice, while Sides took in his grounder, putting out Pieford at third. Hoff grounded to Fish, reaching third, while Sussong was thrown out at home. With the bases still filled, Hume struck out, retiring this side.

In the ninth after Princeton had gone out in one, two, three order, Virginia again got a man on third. Pearson was hit by a pitched ball, Cabanis sacrificed him to second, and without stopping the runner went on around and reached third safely. His chances of scoring were killed, however, by Maddux and Pieford fanning. Again

In the next inning a man reached third while so far Princeton had never even threatened to score.

Sussong was hit by a pitched ball and when Honaker singled he went to third, and it looked like the pitcher was going to win his own game. Walker flew out to third and Honaker stole second. Then Hoff sent a grounder to Fish, reaching first on a fielder's choice, but Sussong was thrown out at third. Hume fanned.

In the last inning Vaughn flew out to Cabanis, but Sides singled to center, stealing second. Harlan fouled to Pearson, and then Dillon came up with his clean two-bagger to left, scoring Sides. Honaker threw out Heyneger at first. Virginia was unable to turn the trick in her half and the cheering crowd dispersed at sundown, while the teams gave a cheer for each other. The score:
